The Impact of Private Support

❯❯❯ Gifts fund non-endowed student scholarships, community projects and travel expenses for students and faculty presenting at national conferences.

❯❯❯ International study abroad is particularly important in the field of social work, and gifts help fund international experiences for students.

❯❯❯ With private support, the College has been able to attract promising young scholars, propel its academic status and appeal to the nation’s highly recognized educators.

Study abroad locations include the Czech Republic, South Africa, England, Ireland, the Caribbean and Mexico. New locations are added each year.

The College of Social Work replaced computers, upgraded the observation room and upgraded audio and visual equipment to provide students with hands-on interviewing and counseling experience.

The College of Social Work faculty continues to be involved in the community with local social service organizations, in addition to the college-based initiatives.

The College maintains partnerships with more than 500 social service agencies throughout Florida and the Southeast to prepare students for field education.

The College is combining its expertise in providing professional social work skills with community resources in a first-of-its-kind initiative using student-developed entrepreneurial business models to aid social service organizations and the Tallahassee community in identifying comprehensive solutions to local homelessness.

One of the College of Social Work’s unique qualities is that it is home to two well-respected scholarly journals. Both journals were founded and are currently edited by FSU College of Social Work faculty members. The Journal of Poetry Therapy is edited by Dean Nick Mazza, and Research on Social Work Practice is edited by Professor Bruce Thyer.

The FSU Multidisciplinary Center provides therapeutic interventions and consultations to address severe or complex academic, medical, behavioral and emotional problems in children.
